3 of 3 people found the following review helpful. Do you know your child's school?By A CustomerThis very fine book details how a school curriculum relates to, supports, and ultimately teaches values. Take Charge shows how a school encourages curiosity, and protects children. It details what a parent should and can expect from a school. This book is filled with fine anecdotal stories and children's writing to illustrate its points. It is a must-read for parents and, I'd say, teachers and administrators. 2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. Empowering Parents By A Customer Take Charge is an important book with big ideas for parents as well as all school personnel that have a stake in children's well-being. It is inspiring and informative with real suggestions to empower parents to team with schools to provide safe, fair, consistent, moral, stimulating and creative schools. JoAnn Shaheen and Carolyn Spence have gracefully shared their immense knowledge and understanding of children and schools to make this world a better place for all of us.

Written from the hearts of educators who want to help parents advocate for their child's education, this stirring account provides a framework of principles and values that both parents and educators can use to ensure that every school meets and exceeds its ideals. It explains health and achievement essentials, and how these can be engendered in schools to foster successful environments where all children can be personally and academically enriched. This book demonstrates the responsibilities placed upon parents, families, schools, and communities to promote productive learning environments, and exemplifies how they can work together to accomplish these goals. Real-life experiences and examples are also included to enhance and illustrate chapter themes. For those who value effective education and want to support children, this book is an inspiring guide for consideration.
