About the Author Over 35 years of experience interviewing candidates for various corporate jobs. Excerpt. Reprinted by permission. All rights reserved. "Don't whine about how awful the supervisor treated you, or how you were mistreated by your co-workers. And, stay away from the word "fired," your anger or frustration will come through in your voice. Be brief and candid, and this bears repeating. Never bad-mouth your former employer or supervisor. Speaking ill of anyone during an employment interview is politically incorrect and a sure way to sabotage your chance of getting hired."
